Amount vs. Number / Fewer vs. Less / Further vs. Farther / Lend vs. Borrow

Amount Vs. Number: “Amount” is used for mass nouns, and “number” is used for count nouns. A mass noun is something that can’t be counted in specific measurement units or is measured in bulk. A count noun is something that is easily counted through some unit of measurement. For example, money is considered a mass number when dealing with an aggregate amount. Time and liquids are said as count nouns only when a specific measurement unit is used.

Fewer Vs. Less: Use fewer when referring to people or things in the plural (e.g. People these days are buying fewer newspapers). Use less when referring to something that can’t be counted or doesn’t have a plural form (e.g. It’s a better job, but they pay less money).

Further Vs. Farther: Further refers to an intangible or figurative distance or extent. If referring to a physical distance, use farther. It’s easy to remember that farther contains the word “far” in it, implying physical distance.

Lend Vs. Borrow: When someone lends something to someone, the lender allows, gives, or grants permission to someone to use something on the condition he/she returns it. When a person borrows something, the borrower obtains, gets, or takes something with the expectation that the thing borrowed is returned to the lender. The lender is the giver, and the borrower is the taker.

When to Use Who / Whom

Purpose: Many students become confused regarding when to use “who” or “whom” in a sentence. This handout will explain the rules for deciding which one to use.

Rule 1: “Who” and “whoever” are subjects // “whom” and “whomever” are objects

Because the pronouns who and whoever are subjects, they can be replaced with other subject pronouns such as he, she, or they in order to test if they are used correctly in a sentence. Because the pronouns whom and whomever are objects, they can be replaced with other object pronouns such as him, her, and them to test if they are used correctly in a sentence.

Example: (Who, whom) is going to the store?

To test for the correct word, replace who with another subject pronoun: he
He is going to the store.

Example: You want (who, whom) to go to the store?

Replace whom with another object pronoun: him
You want him to go to the store?

Rule 2: Sometimes the order of the words in a sentence needs to be switched around in order to test for “who” or “whom”

Examples: I am planning to invite those people (who, whom) the company has honored.
Test for who: The company has honored they.
Test for whom: The company has honored them.
Whom is the correct answer

2) (Whoever, whomever) arrives first will win a prize
Test for whoever: She arrives first
Test for whomever: Her arrives
Whoever is the correct answer

3) The guests may bring (whoever, whomever) they wish.
Test for whoever: The guests may bring they.
Test for whomever: The guests may bring them.
Whomever is the correct answer

- Personnel is a different word entirely. Note the different spelling: two n’s and an ending in el. The general meaning is “employees, staff, or those engaged to do a job.” We speak of the military personnel in World War II or the personnel director of the company (one who hires individuals to staff a business).

(2) Try to change the word to past tense (Today I sleep; yesterday I slept.) Affect meets both tests of a verb: Your vote will affect the election.
- With an ed ending, affected means unnatural: She has a very affected way of speaking.

- Effect may be a verb or a noun, and here is where the trouble lies. As a verb, it has an entirely different meaning from affect. Effect means to bring about or to cause to happen: The partners effected an agreement. Congress effected a change in the law.
- But effect may also be a noun; the closest meaning is result or impact: What is the effect of this ruling? It is the law of cause and effect.
