EDUCATION ABROAD

As a Madison student, you can gain global exposure in more than 35 education abroad programs available for JMC students. Education abroad includes a variety of program types and experiences.

STUDY ABROAD

Study abroad allows a student to take classes and earn academic credit that include instruction from MSU faculty or faculty from a host institution abroad.

Faculty-directed programs are where students participate on a program directed by MSU faculty, alongside other MSU students.

In other programs, students enroll in courses with an international institution, transferring credit back to MSU. These programs include:

- Exchange: MSU students enroll as a visiting student at an international university and a student from the host institution comes to East Lansing. MSU students pay MSU tuition and fees.
- Direct Enrollment: MSU students enroll as a visiting student at an international university and pay tuition and fees directly to the host institution.
- Provider: MSU students enroll in a program organized by a third-party provider and pays tuition and fees directly to the provider.
- Consortium: MSU students enroll in a program organized by a peer institution that is part of a special group. Consortium programs MSU is affiliated with include the Big Ten Alliance and the Japan Center for Michigan Universities. Credit and payment vary on these programs.

RESEARCH ABROAD

Research abroad can be done in conjunction with faculty or conducted independently, and can encompass a wide variety of fields. Depending on the selected program, credit will be earned from the host international university or through Michigan State. Research credit is typically awarded either way through a student's academic department.

INTERSHIPS ABROAD

Internships abroad allow students to gain work experience in a new culture and earn academic credit. Depending on the selected program, credit will be earned from the host international university or through Michigan State. Internships allow students to apply acquired skills from an academic program to the professional world.

SERVICE-LEARNING ABROAD

Service-learning opportunities usually include partnering with local community organizations and address a variety of social, economic, environmental or health challenges facing the community.
